MOKENA, ILLINOIS MARCH 4, 1927

Pure Milk Company Speaker Hits Milk Producers Asso.

A meeting of the Pure Milk Company, a dairymen's organization, sponsored by the Illinois Agricultural Association and various Farm Bureau officers, was held in the St. Mary hall, at Mokena on Tuesday evening of this week.

Dr. N. Gyer of Harvard was the speaker of the event and devoted most of his talk to lambasting Judge Shurtleff of McHenry County, Representative McCarthy of Kane County, also roundly condemning the past and present methods and personnel of the Milk Producers Association. With apparent intent the speaker left little time for discussion of the object and purposes of the organization whose contracts he desired those present to sign.

With one or two exceptions, the small group of dairymen present took little interest in the proposal to launch a new association at this time.

The feeling prevailed that the old Milk Producers Association, if given proper support, could do more toward improving the present unsatisfactory milk price conditions than could a new untried organization. They agreed that one Association is enough. After more than a year of expensive campaigning the Pure Milk Company officers claim to have about 2,000 signers to their "iron clad" contract. This new marketing company claims to be organized under the Co-operative Marketing Act of 1923.

It will be recalled that the old Milk Producers Association was instrumental in amending that Sapiro drawn measure so as to prevent any farmer members of then existing Associations from being forced under the provisions of the new Co-operative law against his will.

The Co-operative Marketing Act is in full force at this time and is a combination of severe penalties which may be imposed upon a farmer who violates any provision of a contract that he may have been foolish enough to sign.

This law provides that a member may be enjoined from violating the terms of his signed agreement and then he may be compelled to pay all court costs of both sides in such a procedure. It also provides that any person who under certain conditions, criticizes the finances or management or activities of an association organized thereunder shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine of possibly $1,000 and may further be compelled to pay the aggrieved association an additional sum of $500.

In other words should a contract signer become dissatisfied with his marketing conditions and undertake to sell his milk outside the Pure Milk Company channels or should he talk too much about his company, he may lose not only his market, but $1,500 in cold cash as well. A prominent member of our Illinois Legislature stated as an excuse for voting favorably on the Co-operative Marketing Act, that he didn't believe there could be a farmer in the state of Illinois so ignorant as to sign a contract coming within the jurisdiction of that vicious law. Before signing a Pure Milk Company contract or becoming a member of any other organization, a farmer should make a careful study of both the by laws and particularly Senate Bill No. 165, The Co-operative Marketing Law.

Tinley Pavement Case Comes Up Again March 11

A hearing has been set for March 11 in the county court in Chicago relative to the Tinley Park concrete paving fight. At first all the property owners on the street to be improved signed up in favor of the paving and since then a number of them have changed their minds and are now fighting it.

Cannot use Residence Phones For Business

The past week representatives of the Illinois Bell Telephone Company called the attention of a number of Mokena telephone subscribers who have telephones in their residences, but who are using these phones in connection with business located in the same building, that they must sign up new contracts for business rates, explaining that the Interstate Commission rules that where a subscriber has a business in the same building in which his home is located and uses his residence phone in connection with his business he must pay the business rate. As this increase in rates will mean quite a bit thruout the year, many of the Mokena telephone subscribers coming under this ruling are refusing to sign up for the business rate.

Mokena Telephone Exchange Has Steady Growth

Mokena's growth last year, as indicated by the number of new telephones installed, was described by J. F. Whalen, Commercial Manager of Joliet today.

Mr. Whalen said that there was a net increase of 9 telephones installed in Mokena during 1926, which was one of the greatest in the history of the Illinois Bell Telephone Company as a whole. This means greater prosperity, also greater development and greater commercial activity in the city.

In Mokena today, there are 126 telephones, compared with 100 telephones, ten years ago.

It's the aim of the Telephone Co., said Mr. Whalen to provide ample facilities for the normal growth of this community and keep pace with its constant prosperity.

MAKE WOLF ROAD ROUTE 51 Thru MOKENA

MOKENA DEVELOPMENT AND HARD ROAD IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION
L. G. Bruder, Chairman, Publicity Committee.

Interest In Wolf Road Is Becoming State Wide

Interest in Route 51 on Wolf Road is now becoming state wide and cities and towns to the north are working hard to get the route mentioned located on Wolf Road. This highway if concreted thru will be about 250 miles long and will be one of the most important trunklines in the state and will even extend up into Wisconsin.

The past week L. G. Bruder, publicity manager of Mokena Development Association has been a very busy man. He prepared a circular letter and a map of Wolf Road and has sent out over 270 letters to all business organizations, banks and newspapers in northern Illinois who may be interested in Wolf Road. He has also had interviews with officials of the Rock Island and Wabash railroads on the matter. He has also designed and has had hundreds of auto windshield pasters printed as per the design shown on this page boosting for Wolf Road and there has been a big demand for them. Anyone wishing any of these pasters can get them free by writing to or calling at the News-Bulletin office. Whoop'er up! Boost for route 51 on Wolf Road.

Peter Michelsen of Mokena and Charles Erickson of Alpine prominent members of the association have been exceedingly busy all of the past week speaking with Cook County officials relative to securing their aid in backing up the Wolf Road project. Commissioner William Busse of Cook County is much in favor of Wolf Road and will use all of his influence to back up the project. All efforts are being made to build up as strong an appeal for route 51 on Wolf Road as possible. This is the logical route as it will serve the most people and will be one of the main arteries of the state of Illinois.

At the weekly meeting of the Mokena Development Association held Tuesday evening, Supervisor Chas. Doctor of Orland township was present and gave an interesting talk in which he showed that Orland township is also vitally interested in the Wolf Road. He said his family have been paying tax for 78 years on a farm and still are driving on mud roads.

L. G. Bruder, chairman of the publicity committee of the Mokena Development Association is in receipt of the following letter from C. J. Wolf, president of the Melrose Park State Bank whose father was the founder of Wolf Road:

C. R. Miller, Director of Public Works and Buildings, at Springfield. I will also have the Melrose Park Kiwanis Club adopt a resolution in favor of the project as well as the Chamber of Commerce of Melrose Park forward a resolution to Col. Miller.

I have asked the officials of the village of Hillside, thru which this road passes, to adopt a resolution favoring the project and forward same to Col. Miller. The resolution will be passed at their meeting on Monday evening. I will see officials of the village of Berkeley, thru which this road passes, and ask them to do likewise.

I am also writing to Mills & Sons, real estate operators, who own a considerable tract of land at North Avenue and Wolf Road, and will ask them to give us their assistance. Miller on road work, and I know to be a personal friend of his, and ask him to use his influence.

I will keep in close touch with this matter and get everyone whom I can possibly think of to write to Col. Miller in favor of the Wolf Road project. If at any time you have any suggestions to make, I will be glad to hear from you.

Drink Water to Help Wash Out Kidney Poison

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Begin Taking Salts

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

The DOOM TRAIL

by ARTHUR D. HOWDEN SMITH
AUTHOR OF PORTO BELLO GOLD ETC.
W.N.U. SERVICE COPYRIGHT BY BRENTANOS

"Above everything else, I must know what is happening at Jagara," he said. "The Doom Trail may wait. The news which Ta-wan-ne-ars brought of the intent of the French to replace Joncaire's trading post with a stone fort is the most menacing tidings we have had since the peace was signed. It makes manifest what I have always contended: that there can be no real peace whilst we and the French sit cheek by jowl, each striving for more power than the other.

"Peace on paper there may be; but the French will be breaking it, as they have done in the case of Joncaire's post and as they now plan to do by building a fort upon English territory. I must know what they do there, Master Ormerod. I must know beyond a doubt. I must have a man I can trust who will see for himself on the spot."

"Surely, Corlaer—" "Corlaer cannot speak French. Moreover, if he could, his face is known along the whole frontier. He and Joncaire are old opponents. 'Tis you who must go. Masquerade as a Frenchman. There are plenty of lads who go out every year to Canada to have a try at the fur trade. You should be able to pass for one of them. At any rate 'tis worth the attempt."

"'Tis well worth trying," I agreed. "Also, 'tis possible I may pick up some news of the Trail from Joncaire."

"Possible," he assented; "but keep the Trail in the back of your mind. 'Tis this fort which concerns me now. For look you, Master Ormerod, if I secure proof the French meditate in earnest so grave a breach of the treaty 'twill strengthen by so much my case against Murray. Then might I dare indeed to stir the Iroquois to hostilities against him, as Peter suggested."

"I will do what I may," I promised. "Tis well. And be not reluctant to accept advice from Corlaer and the Indians. They are schooled in the forest's craft. Good-by, sir, and be vigilant."

He gave me a hearty clasp of the hand and bowed me out. In the street Corlaer awaited me.

"Der tide is flooding," he said, and without another word set off at a good round pace.

We came presently to a wharf at the foot of Deye street, where lay the sloop Betsy, her sails unstopped, land-lines slack. She cast off as we stepped aboard, and presently I was looking back over her stern at the dwindling skyline of the quaint little city.

On the fourth day the river bore us through a country of low, rolling hills and plains that lifted to mountainous heights in the distance. There were farms by the water's edge, and sometimes the imposing mansion of a patron with its attendant groups of buildings occupied by servants, slaves and tenants.

On the fifth day we sighted in the distance the stockades of Fort Orange, which the English were beginning to call Albany, nestling close to the river bank under the shelter of a steep hillcock. We made the tottery pier, and hastened up into the town, delegating to the master of the sloop and his boy the task of conveying our baggage to the tavern. We learned that Murray had spent but twenty-four hours in the town and was gone two days since.

We spent the forenoon in purchasing for me the regular trappings of the frontiersman—moccasins of ankle height and leather leggings and shirt, all Indian in manufacture. The weapons Juggins had supplied me were warmly praised by my comrades.

For the rest there were slim stores of salt, sugar, powder, flints and ball to be packed upon our backs. My garments of civilization I made into a package which I consigned to the inn-keeper's care.

We took the road to Schenectady. It was the last white man's road I was to see, and I long remembered its broad surface and the sunlight coming down between the trees on either hand and the farms with their log houses and stockades.

But I knew I was on the frontier at last, for the stockades were over high for mere herding of cattle and the house walls were loop-holed. In several of the villages there were square, log-built forts, two stories tall, with the top story projecting out beyond the lower, so that the garrison could fire down along the line of the walls.

'Twas sixteen miles to Schenectady, and night had fallen when we halted the gate for admission.

We were afoot again early the next morning. Beyond Schenectady a few farms rimmed the road, but presently we came to a clearing, and on the west side a green barrier stretched across our way. From end to end of the clearing it reached, and as far as either hand as I could see, a high, tangled, apparently impervious green wall of vegetation.

"The road stops here," I said to Ta-wan-ne-ars. "How shall we go on?"

"The road of the white man stops—yes," he answered. "But the road of the Ho-de-no-sau-nee begins."

"What is that?" He made no answer, but kept on his way until we were under the bole of the first of the forest trees.

There at my feet was a deep, narrow slot in the earth, a groove some eighteen inches wide and perhaps twelve inches deep, that disappeared into the gloom which reigned under the interlacing boughs overhead. It did not go straight, but crookedly like a snake, curving and twisting as it changed to meet a mossy boulder or a tree too big to be readily felled or uprooted. As I stooped over it I saw that its bottom and steeply sloping sides were hard-packed, beaten down by continual pressure, the relentless pressure of countless human feet for generations and centuries.

Ta-wan-ne-ars instantly led the way into the groove of the trail, and as if instinctively swung into an easy loping trot. I followed him and the Dutchman brought up the rear.

It was cool under the trees, for the sun seldom penetrated the foliage, dense already although it was only the fog-end of spring. And it was very silent—terribly, oppressively silent.

The crack of a stick underfoot was like a musket shot. The padding of our feet on the resilient leaf-mold was like the low rolling of muffled drums. The timorous twittering of birds seemed to set the echoes flying.

Yet I was amazed when Ta-wan-ne-ars halted abruptly in mid-afternoon, and inclined his ear toward the trail behind us.

"What is it?" I asked, and so completely had the spirit of the forest taken possession of me that I whispered the words.

"Something is following us," he answered.

Corlaer put his ear to the bottom of the trail, and a curious expression crossed his face.

"Ya," was all he said.

CHAPTER VII

Along the Great Trail

"Shall we return and face them?" I asked eagerly.

Ta-wan-ne-ars permitted himself a smile of friendly sarcasm.

"If we can hear them, surely they can hear us," he said. "No, we will keep on. There is a place farther along the trail from which we can look back upon them. Come, Ormerod, you and I will run ahead. Peter will follow us."

Ta-wan-ne-ars shifted his musket to his shoulders, and broke into a long, loping stride. I followed him.

Half a mile up the trail he stopped.

"Walk in my tracks, brother," he

"Message Sticks" Open Books to Aborigines

One of the mysteries of the aboriginal of Australia is the ease with which he reads "message-sticks" regardless of whether they have been written by one of his own tribesmen or a member of a distant tribe with which he has never come into contact.

The signs and symbols apparently are the same among the aboriginal tribes, according to a writer in the Sydney Bulletin, who asserts that he has "seen an old aboriginal, to whom a stick from another tribe many miles distant had been shown, translate the 'strange markings with fluency, and when some time afterward the same stick was shown again to another na-said. "And be certain that you do no bruise a twig."

With the utmost caution he parted the screen of underbrush on our right hand, and revealed a tunnel through the greenery into which he led the way, hesitating at each step until he had gently thrust aside the intervening foliage. Once in the tunnel, however, his care was abandoned, and he ran quickly to the trunk of a huge pine which soared upward like a monumental column, high above the surrounding trees. He leaned his musket against the pitchy bole.

"The symbol of the Long House," he said tapping the swelling girth of it. "Strength and symmetry and grandeur. We will climb, brother."

He swung himself up into the branches, which formed a perfect ladder, firm under foot, behind the screen of the pine needles. When the other treetops were beneath us, he straddled a bough and cleared a loophole from which we might look out over the forest we had traversed.

We looked for so long, without anything happening that my eyeballs ached. But at last there was a movement like the miniature upheaval which is caused by an ant in breaking ground. Boughs quivered, and a figure appeared in the open. 'Twas Corlaer. He glanced around him and strode on. In a moment he had passed the clearing and disappeared in the forest.

Ta-wan-ne-ars hitched forward and peered through the loophole with tense muscles. And again there was a wait which seemed endless. My eyelids blinked from the strain of watching.

The desolation and loneliness of the wilderness were so complete that it seemed inconceivable another human being could be within view. And whilst this thought occupied my mind a dark figure crawled on hands and knees from the mouth of the trail. At that distance all we could see of his costume was the clump of feathers that bristled from his scalplock.

He followed Peter into the trail on our side of the clearing, and there was a second and briefer pause. Then as silently as ghosts a string of figures flitted into the clearing. There were six of them, each with musket in the hollow of his arm, each with bristling feather headdress.

Ta-wan-ne-ars emitted a guttural grunt, quite unlike his usual rather musical utterances.

"Down!" he rasped. "Down! The time is scant!"

At the foot of the pine he snatched up his musket without a word, and turned into the green tunnel that debouched upon the screen of the trail.

As we stepped into the worn slot Peter came into view.

"Well?" he said phlegmatically. "Cahnua dogs! They dare to invade territory of the Long House!"

"We can cross der Mohawk to der south branch of der trail," proposed Corlaer. "They would not dare to follow us there."

"No," snarled Ta-wan-ne-ars; "we shall not step aside for them. We will attend to them ourselves. They will not attack unless they have to for we are still near der Mohawk castle, although 'tis upon the opposite bank of the river. They will leave us alone until night."

"But why cannot we attack them?" A look of ferocity which was almost demonic changed his usually pleasant features into an awful mask.

"In an ambuscade one might escape. No, my brother Ormerod, we will wait until they attack us. Then—"

He paused significantly.

"Not one of the Keepers shall return to tell Murray how his brothers died."

We took up the march. 'Twas already mid-afternoon, and shortly the dimness of twilight descended upon the trail, as the level rays of the setting sun were turned aside by the interlacing masses of vegetation.

Twilight faded into dusk and still we kept on. Ta-wan-ne-ars had eyes like a cat's, and I, too, accustomed myself to perception of hanging branches and the unexpected turns and twists in the groove of the path. The stars were out in the sky overhead when we stepped from the shelter of the forest into a rocky dell divided by a tiny brook.

"We will camp here," said Ta-wan-ne-ars.

He rested his musket on a boulder and began to collect firewood.

"Why a fire?" I asked.

"The trailers must not think we suspect them," he replied curtly. "If we lit no fire they would know for certain that we were suspicious."

I helped him, whilst Corlaer crouched by the opening of the trail on watch. We soon had a respectable pile of wood, but before kindling it the Seneca bade us strip off our leathern shirts and stuffed them with underbrush into a semblance of human shapes. A third figure to represent himself he contrived out of the packs and several branches.

SHARING THE GOOD NEWS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 8:4-8; II Cor. 5:14-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be my witnesses.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling Others About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Winning Recruits for Christ's Army.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Telling Our Companions About Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Evangelism: Duty, Method, Results.

I. Preaching Everywhere (Acts 8:4).

Following the stoning of Stephen, the enemies of the Lord were more active than ever in their efforts to stamp out the new faith. With Saul as their leader they dragged men and women from their homes and imprisoned those who confessed Christ. The devil overreached himself in this for this persecution scattered the believers everywhere and they preached the gospel as they went. The time had now come for this witness-bearing to extend beyond Jerusalem as the Lord had commanded. The Lord permitted this persecution so as to scatter them.

II. Philip Preaching the Gospel in Samaria (vv. 5-8).

Philip was one of the seven so-called deacons. He was not an apostle, nor a minister in the accepted sense of that term, but a layman. He is the only man called an evangelist in the New Testament. He is an example of what a devoted layman can do in preaching the gospel in the evangelization of the world. He went to the city of Samaria and preached Christ, showing that the purpose of God included these despised people. The fact that Philip preached Christ unto these people shows that the true evangelist's message is Jesus Christ. He did not preach Christ as an ethical teacher or an example merely, but Christ as the Savior from sin through the substitutionary offering of Himself on the cross. This is shown by the fact that he preached Christ to the eunuch from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. He not only preached Christ as the Savior from the guilt of sin, but from the power of sin as symbolized in baptism, which means not only identification with Christ in His death, but to arise in the power of His resurrection, to walk in newness of life. Then, too, according to verse 12 he preached Christ as a reigning king. Philip's preaching was fruitful, for multitudes believed his message which was accompanied with numerous miracles. He cast out unclean spirits, healed the palsied and the lame. Great joy accompanied the reception of the gospel by these Samaritans.

III. Paul an Example of a True Preacher of the Gospel (II Cor. 5:9-20).

1. His supreme aim was to please God (v. 9).

To live or to die was immaterial to him if his service was but acceptable to God. This transcendent aim was strengthened by the consciousness that every one must one day stand before the judgment seat of Christ. This aim explains Paul's devotion.

2. His consciousness of responsibility (v. 11).

His sense of solemn responsibility was the explanation of Paul's behavior. Some thought that he was mentally unbalanced. His knowledge of God's holy nature and of man's sinful condition moved him earnestly to persuade men to be reconciled to God. No one who knows God's terror will be half-hearted in his ministry.

3. He was constrained by the love of Christ (v. 14).

This means that he was governed by Christ's love. Ministerial devotion is the expression of reciprocal love. Christ's supreme love was expressed in His death for us. Our love in return is expressed in our devotion to Him.

4. Consciousness of the God-wrought change in Him (v. 17).

It was because he was wrought upon by God and was therefore a new creature that he sought to do His will.

5. The content of the gospel which he preached (vv. 18, 19).

The reconciliation of God through the death of Christ was his central message. In the incarnation God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself.

6. Paul was an ambassador sent from God to appeal to the world to be reconciled unto God (v. 20).

He was the ambassador from the high court of heaven sent to this rebellious world. In a real sense, every Christian minister is occupying the same position.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Frederick the Great

AN UNHAPPY boy, imprisoned and in danger of death, was one day forced by his father to stand at the grated window of his cell and watch his dearest friend executed. The boy was Prince Frederick of Prussia, later known as Frederick II, or Frederick the Great. He had a sadder, more unfortunate boyhood than did any beggar in his kingdom. His father, Frederick William, was a stern, harsh king, and a harsher parent. He was military-mad and would allow his young son Frederick to study nothing but the art of war. The boy loved poetry, music and science.

It was, in a measure, the old story of Peter the Great and Alexis over again. And it almost had the same terrible climax. For, at last, wearied by his father's abuse and cruelty, and resentful of the injustice to which he was subjected, Frederick made up his mind to run away from the life he hated and to take refuge with his mother's brother, King George I of England. His most intimate friend, Lieutenant Katt, helped him escape from Berlin; but their flight was discovered and they were caught and brought back. Then came such punishment as few fathers could have devised.

Frederick was sent to prison and Katt was put to death directly outside the prince's cell. King Frederick William then demanded that Frederick renounce all rights to the throne. This the prisoner pluckily refused to do. The king in rage declared he would put Frederick to death, and was with difficulty dissuaded from the plan. He contented himself with exiling his son from court; and, in 1733, when Frederick was but twenty-one, forced him to marry a princess for whom the young bridegroom had not the slightest liking. For seventeen years after that Frederick lived in semi-seclusion on one of his estates, only returning to public life when, on the death of his father, in 1740, he came to the throne of Prussia.

During the forty-six years of his reign Frederick well earned his title of "The Great." He found Prussia a secondary German state with a population of barely 2,240,000. He left it rich in new possessions, territory and power and with a population of 6,000,000.

The fair principalities of Silesia, according to Frederick's ideas, ought to belong to Prussia. So, the same year he became king, he set out to acquire them. A two years' war followed, in which Frederick's hardly acquired military education stood him in good stead. For he was victorious, and Silesia was annexed to Prussia. Frederick ruled his new possessions well and with mildness; and, although a Protestant, allowed religious freedom to Silesian Catholics. Knowing the unsettled condition of Europe and having fresh conquests in view, the victor now devoted himself to building up the strength of his armies; and, in 1743, he annexed East Prussia to his kingdom.

Austria, so Frederick believed, had designs on Silesia; so he formed an alliance with France and other countries and (to keep Austria's mind on matters of defense rather than aggression) invaded Bohemia in 1744. But the Austrians and Saxons combined and repelled the invasion. The campaign dragged on with varying fortunes until a peace treaty was signed by whose terms Frederick still held Silesia, and received $1,000,000 war indemnity.

Eleven years of peace followed, which were spent by Frederick in strengthening Prussia at home and abroad, in promoting arts and industries and in raising his army to 160,000 men. This peace period was broken by a rumor that Russia, Austria and Saxony were combining against Prussia. Fearing lest he might lose his cherished provinces of Silesia, Frederick forestalled the allies' action by invading Saxony. This started a seven years' war, in which Frederick won little except a military reputation that rendered him a strong and decisive power in European politics. When peace was declared he used his own private fortune in repairing the ravages made by war.

In the same year he concluded a treaty with Russia and was active in the first partition of Poland. By the terms of this division he acquired all of Polish Prussia and part of Great Poland to the north. Henceforth, Frederick's kingdom was divided into West and East Prussia.

The crowning act of Frederick's statecraft, and one that stirred the political system of the whole continent (as well as marking Prussia's first open attempt to lead all the German states), was the forming, in 1785, of the "Furstenbund" (League of Princes) of the German kingdoms and principalities into a solid federation; thus beginning what, in 1870, his descendant completed.

In 1786 Frederick the Great died, leaving his nephew, who succeeded him, a kingdom his genius had increased in area by 29,000 square miles, a population increased by 3,600,000, a treasury containing over $70,000,000 (the richest in Europe), an army of 200,000 and boundless credit with every other nation.

Thus, in his seventy-fourth year, perished the greatest of German monarchs, a man whose father had thought him a fool and unfit to reign.

COATS OF NOVELTY WORSTEDS; SPRING HATS FEATURE CROWNS

THE black and white vogue is "trying on" at a fast and furious rate for spring. Especially is this true in the realm of sports coats, where startling black and white plaids are considered one of the smartest items for the coming season.

Choose a model such as the one in this picture and you will be credited as being clothed most fashionably. The basket weave plaided worsted which contrasts black with white, selected as the medium for this swaggar coat emphasizes the trend toward as these tall crowns do perform—they turn, they twist, they double over, and when all is said and done, they come forth in handsome form. In the manipulation of the fashionable crown, not a trick does the milliner miss in the way of latest "wrinkles," creases, folds and other details which trend to mold into becomingness.

The choice of the Parisienne for the practical hat for immediate wear still rests on felt, and it includes every version from the youthful skull cap types to the imposing tall-crowned ef-extreme novelty and startling effect. Most of the spring sports coats are fur-collared. Natural lynx, collars this one.

The latest coats are noted for their unusual pockets. In the instance of the smart spring mode here pictured, the looping of a wide strap of the fabric from beneath a large button centered in the pocket imparts to it an unmistakable style touch.

Black and white plaids with stripings of brilliant red, green and yellow rayon are the "last word" in cloakings for sportswear.

Dressier coats also register black and white combinations, but in a different manner from sports models. That is, they achieve the contrast of black and white in the trimming rather than in the weave itself. Of such are the patrician looking slim black suede models which are collared with white calfskin. Satin, moire and flat crepe are strongly advocated for the black fects which are so eminently suited to the matron. As the French milliners see it, the style is all in the felt itself and its manipulation. It needs little or no trimming—a modish touch of grosgrain ribbon, a sparkling ornament to distinguish it, or that which is latest of all, a novel flat feather motif.

There is also an inclination manifest to give a springlike aspect to the felt hat with a cluster of flowers cunningly posed either low on the left brim or conspicuously high on the crown. The vogue is especially for violets, either white or purple. Sometimes there is a violet-colored scarf to match.

From the standpoint of draped crowns which spell extreme chic, the hats herewith pictured are fraught with interest.

An outstanding feature of the first model in this group is that the milliner makes part of the hat of felt coat for spring, for the style message from across seas places especial stress on the silk coat for the coming months. These are variously detailed with white ermine or baby fox and the combining of monkey fur with ermine is an effective new touch.

Black cloth or silk coats with white embroidery are attracting much interest. These are timely for immediate wear. Later the white coat quilted or hand embroidered in black will make its appearance.

To the crowns of our chapeaux do we pay homage these days, for apparently they are "doing the honors" in conveying the spring millinery style message. Especially do crowns have everything to do with the smartness of the new felts. Such acrobatic feats piecegoods, using a felt hood for the much bedraped crown. The brim of the hat of imposing crown, shown at the top to the right, rolls up at one side, which is a most stylish thing for it to do. The fact that it is velvet-faced, and that the tall tabs are stitched row-and-row adds to its "Frenchness." The crown of the center hat expresses the "last word" of the mode. In the hat pictured below to the left we see a happy combination of style details, such as the beret suggestion for the crown, its multitudinous creases and especially its ribbon trim. The last model in the group is noteworthy in that it reveals the trend toward the cloche silhouette.

ORLAND M. E. CHURCH Notes.

Elmer L. Satterlund, Pastor.
Sunday March 6—
Bible School at 9:30. Classes for all ages.
Morning worship at 10:30.

If you are "unattached" so far as a church is concerned don't you think that it is because you make no effort to "tie up with the church". Recently remarks have been made by "newcomers" in this community to the effect that they are "not in" with the church groups. The churches of Orland stand with open doors to those who wish their benefits. If you have no church affiliations and care to worship with us we welcome you.
Evening service at 7:30. We have a "special treat" in that Mr. A. W. Lind, formerly of the United States Forestry Service and a resident of Seattle, Washington, will give an illustrated stereopticon lecture on "The Mountains of the Northwest". Do not miss him.
Friday March 11—The outstanding picture of "Richard, The Lionhearted".
Sunday March 13—
Special illustrated lecture, "The Life of Martin Luther and the Protestant Reformation". Everyone is cordially invited.
Do not miss him.
On Sunday evening March 27 the Intercommunity service was held at the Worth Community Church. The Orland M. E. choir rendered two excellent anthems and the sermon of the evening was preached by the Pastor of the Orland M. E. Church.

The emphasis was upon the Lenten season which can be made a time of "spiritual adventure" and achievement both for individuals and for churches. Reverend Paul Sanders of the Worth Church presided. The pastor of the Orland church invited the Worth "folks" to Orland for an intercommunity meeting on March 27.

Mrs. David Agate is reported as improving and is at her home.
Master Gordon Kay is still at the Burnside Hospital, Chicago where he has been ever since he broke his leg in a coasting accident in Orland, this winter.

There is still sickness at the Jas. Creer home and the boys are unable to go to school.
At the morning service last Sunday, the pastor of the Orland M. E. Church gave everyone present a manual of home worship for Lent.

This booklet has been prepared under the guidance of the Federal Council of Churches and the pastor desires that all desiring a copy should make it known to him. Another distribution of booklets will take place next Sunday morning. You are welcome to a copy.

Watch for further announcements regarding Lenten Passion Week and Easter services.

Secret of Big Light Beam

In huge electric searchlights that cast beams visible for 50 or 60 miles on clear nights, the carbons are not like those of ordinary arc lamps. Instead, the electrodes are cored carbons containing chemicals in the cores. The main source of light is a small body of gas contained in the crater at the end of the positive electrode. This crater of gas quadruples the strength of the beam.

Important Waterway

The Suez canal, opened in 1869, has a length of 101 miles, and a minimum width of 147 feet, 8 inches. The maximum draught of water allowed for vessels using the canal is 32 feet. The average time for transit through the canal is 15 hours 20 minutes. The canal is owned by a company, and Great Britain holds a controlling interest in the company.

King's Death Warrant

The original warrant for the execution of Charles I is in the library of the house of lords. It was produced by Colonel Harker after the Restoration, and was the evidence upon which those who had signed it were excused from the indemnity act.

WORTH

To the Friends of the Worth Community church:—

We have come again to the most vital period of the Christian year, the Lenten and Easter season. At this time, over the entire world, followers of Christ turn their thoughts to the great event that made Christian life a reality. To turn for a time from the temporary, common place things and direct our attention to the qualities that bring eternal life.

I know that you will join with me in making this Lenten and Easter season an outstanding event in the life of our community. This may be passed over lightly as it has been many times in the past or it may mean a great experience in our lives.

In order that together we may stand on common ground, let us check up by asking ourselves the following questions:

1. Have I played square with my family in the past year?

a. Has my life been an inspiration to them?

b. Would I have my boy or girl follow directly in my footsteps?

2. Have I lived up to my responsibility to the church and community?

a. Has my life been an inspiration to them?

b. Would I have my boy or girl follow directly in my footsteps?

2. Have I lived up to my responsibility to the church and community?

a. If everyone in this community were just like me. 1.

Would it be possible or necessary to have a church? 2.

Would my community be able to progress?

3. Have I played square with my God? a. Is my soul at peace with God and man? b. Have I given my soul a chance to develop in any way? c. Have I just been tied up with a lot of selfish common place things that 50 years from now will not make any difference while my soul must go on into eternity with the start I have given it?

Am I getting the most out of life?

These and many other questions we might ask. If we were perfectly honest and free from self satisfaction or self righteousness we might find our rating pretty far down the scale.

Let us answer these questions by joining in our Lenten and Easter services, and to add, a new understanding of life and our fellowmen.

Should Meet

Demands of the Health Com.

As we stated in our letter last week if a proper amount of activity were shown by the authorities toward meeting the demand of the Commissioner of Health of the City of Chicago, Dr. Bundeson would not push his orders beyond reason. We find that he has kept his word.

We also find that all authorities, in any manner whatever responsible in this matter, are using every effort to push the retesting of the dairy herds of the District, and that with great success. These parties are local boards of supervisors, State and Federal officials as the farmers themselves. We find that none of these parties are in any manner shirking their duty.

In our efforts to get these officials up on their toes, we only had to get into the country the fact that the County Boards were being held responsible. So soon as this fact seeped into the minds of the Dairy-men, a drive at those Boards started matters moving.

We found the State authorities stepping to the front with every available man turned into this field and put to work. This and other activities were what the Doctor told our Committee would save the day and as stated above he has kept his word.

One of the things we have learned while in this work is: That when men have a clear understanding with each other, it is not a hard matter to clear the atmosphere of all misunderstanding and things soon right themselves.

When the Chicago papers began to publish what they said was Dr. Bundeson's order in the matter of retesting, The Milk Producers Association immediately through their President and Secretary sought a conference with the Doctor at which time he stated that he would not go beyond reason if a proper amount of activity were shown by all parties concerned.

We immediately got in touch with the parties concerned with the result that the retesting is being taken care of in great shape. The state informs us that every available man is at work. The County Boards have come to the front, the farmers have done all in their power and all pulling together are making a showing, beyond all expectations.

This is always true, in every matter where the public at large is interested. When all interested parties work and work together results are sure to follow. A Long Pull, A Strong Pull and a Pull All Together Always Wins.

A King in War and Love

The heart story of history's most popular monarch as he wages war on infidel hordes and struggles against treachery and intrigue in his army camp while his soul is torn by jealousies toward his capricious Queen. A picture full of adventuresome romance and action so thrilling that it sets the blood pounding; so beautiful it grips, fascinates.

Two Principles

ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL discovered an electrical principle upon which a great communications art has been founded.

Those who undertook to give practical value to his discovery likewise left to their successors a principle of service, that has been developed into an intercommunicating system of over 17,000,000 telephones.

Both of these principles were built upon and developed with the same objective,—that of enabling men to talk one to another easily, conveniently, cheaply. With nation-wide telephone service already an accomplished fact, these principles still continue to act and react upon each other, producing new ideals of service, new goals toward which to strive.

Interest In Wolf Road State Wide

points mentioned in the law.

Very truly Yours,

FRANK T. SHEETS,

Chief Highway Engineer

For the benefit of interested citizens who are not thoroughly conversant with the provisions of the state enactment providing for the $100,000,000 bond issue for constructing hard surfaced highways in Illinois, we publish the following relative to projected highway route No. 51, which is a part of Sec. 9 of the State law.

"ROUTE NO. 51"

"Beginning at a point on route 44 east of Wilton Center and extending in a northerly direction to Justice affording Andres, Frankfort, Orland, Palos Park, Justice and the intervening communities reasonable connections with each other."

Section 1. A part of which is quoted here, states the purpose of the law.

"Section 1. A State wide system of durable hard surfaced roads shall be constructed by the state of Illinois as soon as practicable upon public highways of the State, along the hereinafter described routes, as near as may be", etc.

Portions of Sec. 7 and all of Sec. 9 are quoted having special reference to powers of the Highways Department in judging and determination of routes and construction.

"Sec. 7. The State wide system of roads herein provided for shall be constructed in strict accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates of cost and contracts of said Department of Public Works and Buildings."

said department of Public Works and Buildings, shall immediately after this act has been approved by the people and before entering into contracts for the construction of said roads, cause to be made reconnaissance, surveys and maps, plans and specifications of said roads, together with approximate estimates of the cost of constructing said roads."

Sec. 9 "The general location of the routes upon and along which said proposed roads are to be constructed shall be substantially as described in this section, so as to connect with each other in substantially the manner hereinafter described in this section, the different communities and the principle cities of the state; however, the said Department of Public Works and Buildings shall have the right to make such minor changes in the location of said routes as may become necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this act."

A glance at your geographically correct state map will prove to you that Wolf Road is or should be route 51. This routing is bigger than Frankfort township, Will or Cook Counties. The demand for Wolf Road has become practically state wide and has been extended beyond our borders into the neighboring states of Wisconsin and Iowa and states to the south.

It is the main trunk highway—Wolf Road Route 51.

GIVES BLOOD TO SAVE INFANT BROTHER'S LIFE

An intra-peritoneal blood transfusion was effected at St. Joseph's hospital, Joliet Tuesday morning by Dr. Lawrence J. Wilhelmi and Dr. Raymond J. Kennedy in an effort to save the life of Nicholas Heiman, Jr., two year old son of Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Heiman of Mokena.

Primarily the transfusion was made to prepare the infant for a surgical operation. He has been suffering from an infection for the past three weeks but is so weak and has so little blood that the operation cannot be performed.

Alfred Heiman, 19 years old, a brother of Nicholas, gave the blood which was required. About a pint of blood was used.

No Engine Fumes In Buick Closed Car

In the 1927 Buick, the new Vacuum Ventilator pulls engine fumes and gases from the crankcase and ejects them outside the car.

This vital new Buick improvement does away with noxious odors. It adds greater luxury and pleasure to enclosed car operation.

The Vacuum Ventilator serves another very important purpose. With it, crankcase vapors have no opportunity to condense and dilute the oil. Owners of 1927 Buicks are advised to drain their crankcase oil only 4 times during the year.

For luxury; and for economy, own a Buick.
